Suzanne Taylor Dater

In 1996 Suzanne retired from the Organization of American States as Senior Program Administrative Officer, managing economic and social development programs in Central and South America and the Caribbean. She took her first photography course in 2001 and has since been hooked on this art form, specializing in nature and travel photography to all seven continents. She has led field trips and received the Master Photographer Award from the NIH Camera Club, honors from the Nature Visions Exhibition, the international George W. Glennie Nature Exhibition, and the Audubon Society. Her work appears in the National Wildlife Federation's "My First Book of Funny Animals" published in 2015.

The slide show she will be presenting depicts the artistic city of Santiago and the vast glacial and forested World Heritage Park of Torres del Paine in southern Chile.
